Army and serving in Italy during World War II.

"I have two outstanding characteristics," he told a reporter for the Kerrville Times last year.

"I spilled soup on a president and didn't get fired, and I kicked a general in the rear and didn't get court-martialed."

Johnson also served in the Korean War, where he was the second African American to become a commissioned officer in the Army's Judge Advocate General's Corps.

James and Dion Kruczek, who served together for a year as musicians in the 1st Infantry Division in Iraq, are now stationed at Fort Sam Houston. They're teaching music to their children, Alex, 7, and Danielle, 9.

Couple use their music to cheer troops

Band assigned to Fort Sam Houston. The band has gigs throughout the year, and members often volunteer to play for wounded comrades and soldiers returning from the war.

"I just think that could be me there," Dion Kruczek, 41, said in a recent interview. "I want to contribute any small way I can. As a fellow soldier, I don't want them to feel forgotten."

The couple know how it feels to rumble down strange roads in a convoy. They've felt their stomachs curl when mortar rounds hit 25 feet from their shadows. They know the pain of longing for their children and loved ones thousands of miles away.

Each time they've performed for burn victims and wounded soldiers at the Powless Guest House and at off-post functions, their yearlong deployment to Iraq that started in early 2004 washes back.

The Kruczek, both of whom hold the rank of sergeant first class, were deployed together to Iraq in February of that year. They served with the 1st Infantry Division at Forward Operating Base Danger in Tikrit until February 2005 and were among more than 84,000 couples serving in the military, according to an estimate published on out.com's U.S. military page.

The couple share more than a love of the military. The classically trained Dion is a multi-instrumentalist

"We've never been away from them that long. I have never actually been so sad before."

DANIELLE KRUCZEK
9-year-old daughter of Army couple

James have played together in Army bands for 16 years, performing everything from marching tunes and patriotic songs to rock 'n' roll.

Together, they follow a long military tradition of musicians entertaining in the war zones to raise troop morale. The practice dates back to the fife and drum corps performance at a celebration for Ethan Allen and the Green Mountain Boys after the capture of Fort Ticonderoga in 1775.

For the first five months of their yearlong deployment, the couple rode in the back of half-ton trucks on eight-hour trips to stark locales. Later they traveled by air, swooping in to sites on separate helicopters. If one crashed, both wouldn't be lost.

The couple practiced every spare moment of every day — discipline kept their nerves from becoming frazzled about their children and each other's safety.

When they returned to their quarters every night, inside one of Saddam Hussein's palaces, they flipped on their computer-connected camera and spoke to their children, who were staying with their grandmother and a nanny in Germany.

Their 5-year-old daughter, Danelle looked forward to visiting them online once a week; her 3-year-old brother Alex didn't quite understand the situation, or their absence.

"It was hard for us," daughter Danielle, now 9, said recently. "We've never been away from them that long. I have never actually been so sad before."

Dion felt the same longing. She wrote a song called "Silver Moon" that speaks to how much she missed her children. She no longer sings that lullaby, as the notes dredge up painful memories.

"If they had been infants or toddlers, they wouldn't have known what was going on," said James, 40. "But it was a tough age for them, they learned to go potty and ride a bike. That's stuff we missed and we can't get back."

Two years have passed since they returned home, and still they're performing to help fellow soldiers through the healing process.

Mary Virginia Pittman-Waller enlisted the couple's MEDCOM show band to play at her Welcome Home Wounded Warrior Initiative events around San Antonio.

"We have a mutual interest in how music is helpful in the healing process," Pittman-Waller said. "They're a big part of my mission."

Before they perform, the couple sit and talk with military members, listening to stories of war and common ties.

Then comes time to play. Time to give the one thing that soothes souls and settles the blues.

"Music is what we can give as a gift," Dion said. "This lets them know you're really important."

keeping the task force focused on its mission. Though sticking to their agenda, members also united in showing compassion to residents whose lives have been devastated in recent months.

On Tuesday, they heard resident Sara Olivares' tearful story of getting an eviction notice because she refused to allow repair work to continue until she could see that the mold was remediated.

Ed Ocampo told how he abandoned his furniture and personal belongings because they had become contaminated. He asked that SAHA destroy them rather than let them go to another family that might get sick from them. Task force members, under Hartman's leadership, worked out a plan that would allow Olivares to view the remediation work, allow repairs to continue and not be evicted.

The Mirasol Homes are part of a federal housing project that includes $21 million for 246 homes in five West Side locations. Complaints about foundation work surfaced in December, and were soon followed by concerns that mold or other contaminants in the houses were making residents' children sick.

Berquist, two teenagers from Massachusetts. Since the teens came up with the idea they have collected thousands of phones and raised more than a million dollars to purchase over 75,000 calling cards for military families.

The Berquists contacted the AT&T corp., which decided to get involved by creating drop-off sites for those wishing to recycle their wireless phones. AT&T stores in 1,800 locations will take part in the event, including fifteen stores in the San Antonio area. In addition AT&T has donated over 30,000 prepaid phone cards to soldiers and recently announced the donation of another 10,000. AT&T has also constructed calling centers in several Middle East locations to help connect military families.

Chris Penrose, group vice president and general manager of AT&T, explained that the company is enthusiastic to be a part of this program.

"We saw this idea and we got excited because we have so many stores that upgrade so many people's phones all the time and now we get a chance to recycle phones and also help our armed forces out," said Penrose.

For those like the Sheridan family, the efforts of Cell Phones for Soldiers and AT&T mean a great deal. According to Sheridan, she has remained at home with the children throughout her husband's deployment. The family separation has been difficult she explained. Although they are able to keep in touch through e-mail, it means a lot to hear his voice and for the kids to talk to their father. "I just want the children to remember what their daddy is like while he is away," Sheridan said.

AT&T encourages anyone planning on getting a new phone to make sure to recycle their old one. In addition to drop-off sites at AT&T stores, more places to donate and additional information about the program can be found by accessing www.cell-phonesforsoldiers.com.

A Child's unexpected turn of events, a call for help

Here is a story about a 7 year-old boy named Maurice. He is now permanently disabled resulting from a flu shot. The boy's mother, Michelle Mouille, said he began running a high fever the evening of the day the flu shot was administered. Two days later, he had to be rushed to the hospital due to constant seizures. There, doctors discovered out of control swelling of his brain.

Maurice was on life support for about 40 days and 40 nights until he was released, but now suffers from numerous other problems. He suffers from epilepsy, cannot talk anymore and has to have his food puréed in a blender since he can no longer chew. Fortunately, he can still hear and comprehend what others are saying to him

The Mouille Family asked La Prensa to report on the unfortunate turn of events they have endured with Maurice to make other parents aware of questions they should think about asking their doctors before having flu shots administered to their children.

In addition, they would like the public to know that a fundraiser in support of Maurice's recovery and medical bills will be held on July 14 at the Bucket Brigade BBQ Restaurant (18770 FM 2252 - just two miles north of Rolling Oaks Mall) from 11 a.m. to midnight. There will be all types of activities throughout the day for kids including moon bounces, a petting zoo, clowns, raffles, a magic show and dunking tanks, as well as a BBQ plate sale.
